

Michael Choukas

Michael Choukas founded Oncopartners in 2006 and is currently the President and CEO. The company was created in response to the rapid expansion of oncology clinical trials and the growing challenge of meeting study enrollment objectives in North America, Europe and globally; and to contribute to unmet and growing needs within the public hospitals of Brazil for clinical resources, funding, and access to the latest oncology treatments.

Oncopartners benefits global oncology research efforts as well as cancer patients in Brazil by bringing them together in an efficient, cost-effective manner. As President of Oncopartners, Michael has worked with the President and the Research Director of IBPC to define complementary operational structures and to assemble a team of experienced clinical development professionals in Brazil and the United States.

Mike has been a leader and strategic innovator in the clinical research industry for over ten years. He founded Scirex Corporation, a pioneer in providing complementary CRO and site management services, and served as its Chairman and Chief Executive Officer from 1996 to 2003. He contributed to the founding vision of United Biosource Corporation where he served as Executive Chairman of the Late Stage Group and Executive Vice President of Strategy and Operations from 2004 to 2006. Mike previously held senior leadership positions as a partner of Bain & Company, Executive Vice President of Dun and Bradstreet Software Services and Chairman and CEO of Springborn Laboratories. Mike holds an MBA from Harvard University and a BA in Economics from Dartmouth College.
